FOREWORD

Dictionaries had always formed the 'a—b—c' in the learning and study of a language. Sanskrit education for ages had started with the committing to heart of the Amarakoṣa. When Western scholars took to Sanskrit study in modern times, they prepared Dictionaries of Sanskrit with meanings in English and other European languages. With the adoption to modern education and the English medium, Indian scholars followed suit with their own Sanskrit-English Dictionaries.

As Monier Williams says in the Preface to his English-Sanskrit Dictionary, an ability to translate from and compose in a language has always been held as a measure of the proficiency in that language. As an aid to such translation and composition, a Dictionary from English to one Indian language is a necessity. So far as Indian languages are concerned, the first Dictionaries of this kind to appear related to some of the regional languages of India—Hindustani, Bengali, Marathi, Telugu and Kannada.

The first effort to provide an English-Sanskrit Dictionary was that of Monier Williams, who produced his work 'A Dictionary of English and Sanskrit' under the patronage of the East India Company in 1851, i.e. twenty years before he brought out his better known Sanskrit-English Dictionary. Regarding the all-round importance of such a Dictionary he pointed out in his Preface to it that it would be helpful even to those who use the modern Indian languages, as "no vernacular tongue is adequate to express the ideas of religion and science without borrowing its terms from the Sanskrit" (p. iii) and that "the influence which it (Sanskrit) exercises on the spoken dialects of India" was "far greater than that of Latin, or English, Italian or French." (p. iii). The labour involved and the method of compilation followed for his pioneering work in about 860 pages are set forth by him in the same Preface. According to his statement, it took him eight years to complete his English-Sanskrit Dictionary.

Twentyfive years after this, the pioneer Indian scholar to undertake an English-Sanskrit Dictionary was Anundoram Borooah who was also the pioneer in the whole field of modern Sanskrit scholarship among the Assamese. Born in 1850, an I.C.S. Officer in 1872, Borooah enjoyed hardly a decade and a half for his literary career and yet within that brief span, he undertook and accomplished more than one literary project, besides editing and publishing some important Sanskrit classics. In 1881, this modern Assamese Amarasiṁha, who had mastered his Amarakoṣa at fourteen, planned a work in Sanskrit grammar more arduous and prodigious than the undertakings of Bhandarkar or any other scholar, a comprehensive Sanskrit grammar in twelve volumes of one thousand pages each ! Two of the volumes of this series were devoted to prosody and lexicography and even these two, which alone he could bring out before his end came, elicited Max Müller's admiration. The lexical volume of this series which he brought out in 1884—the Nānārthasaṁgraha—is a thesaurus of homonyms based on nearly a score of old Koṣas of this kind, and their commentaries, including unpublished ones.

Borooah's English-Sanskrit Dictionary appeared in three volumes between 1877 and 1880, the second and third volumes carrying also his Higher Sanskrit Grammar and Ancient Geography of India. V. S. Apte, the Poona lexicographer, who followed with his shorter Students' English-Sanskrit Dictionary in 1884, in his Preface, said of Borooah's work, contrasting it with that of Monier Williams: "Mr. Anundoram Borooah's work is eminently practical: it abounds in quotations from several standard authors; the renderings are generally happy...A study of Mr. Borooah's work is a good treat for an advanced Sanskrit scholar..."

Each of these three English-Sanskrit Dictionaries of Monier Williams, Borooah and Apte has its good points and usefulness. By size, range and methodology, Borooah's deserves high commendation. In the Preface to his compilation, Borooah explains the principles and scheme followed by him and the ideas which he had tried to incorporate in it. A balance is kept in the selection of shades of meanings of English words and the incorporation of Sanskrit equivalents for them and the compiler has, without committing the excess of resorting often to coining new words, tried to cite near usages or parallels from the works of classical Sanskrit poets. Several of these last mentioned citations are not only apt and idiomatic but also form striking coincidences in the two languages. New words whose creation could not be avoided are coined with due regard to the genius of the language and in extreme cases, the author is not averse to retaining in Sanskrit garb the English word. "Idiomatic rather than literal" has been the guide-line in the citation of equivalents. For conserving and utilising better the space, he has omitted whatever could be got at by cross-reference or by consulting a book of Sanskrit grammar or a technical treatise. Profusion of compounds is a major characteristic of Sanskrit and as Monier Williams says in his Sanskrit-English Dictionary (Preface p. xii. 1st edn.), to omit them is to 'un-Sanskritise' the language. Here again Borooah has followed the middle path of showing a few select and typical compounds, allowing the user to make out, on his own, the others.

Monier Williams had already a good comprehension of these and other characteristics, difficulties and finer points in the style and genius of Sanskrit which, as he himself says in his Preface (p. vii), is 'peculiarly a language of poetry'. Apte considered Borooah more practical than Monier Williams but too learned for the student and fashioned his own work as a Students' Dictionary. Each of these three Dictionaries is thus a complement to the other two and also an improvement over the earlier in some respects.

The more recent ventures, the stupendous one of Dr. Raghuvira to produce English-Sanskrit glossaries in all branches of knowledge and the further work of the Terminology Commission for the National Language, which has to draw primarily on Sanskrit, are well-known.

Borooah, in his own words, sacrificed the pleasures of private life for service to learning and Sanskrit. Pointing to his Library, he said, "This is the darling of my life, demanding from me my best energy and attention." And of his favourite language, he said, "Sanskrit is dearer than any other language." In republishing his works, the Publication Board, Assam has done the right thing and has placed before the scholars of today the luminous image of a dedicated worker who, in an unbelievably brief spell of twelve years, produced so much work of planned and meticulous labour and enduring quality.

For giving me an opportunity to pay my homage to him, I should thank the Publication Board, Assam.

INTRODUCTION TO THIS EDITION

Several factors have weighed with the Publication Board, Assam, in undertaking to reprint the priceless works of the great Sanskrit scholar, Anundoram Borooah, which were first published about a hundred years ago. Our prime consideration has been the fact that Anundoram Borooah belonged to that pioneering and noble band of Indian scholars who had addressed themselves to the task of rehabilitating the glory and greatness of the Sanskrit language, Sanskrit literature and Sanskrit education. Secondly, the brilliance and profundity of the commentaries and criticisms written by him on a number of important Sanskrit books are almost without parallel in the whole range of Sanskrit literature. Thirdly, by reprinting his works we aspire to rediscover for lovers of Sanskrit all over the world a fund of literary treasures which is now almost forgotten. Finally, we do hope that our endeavour will enable present generations of Indians to become acquainted with the achievements of one of the most eminent scholars of Assam and of the country as a whole who died at the early age of thirty-nine.

People of today cannot but marvel at Anundoram Borooah's stupendous creative genius which found its fulfilment within the span of a short life and which refused to be bogged down in the day-to-day problems of administration that he had to tackle in the capacity of a high official in the civil service of the British Government. The short biography included in the book would help readers to have an idea of the richness and vitality of his wonderful mind. In those days few Indians could aspire to a fame that extended beyond the frontiers of the country, and this was true especially for a man belonging to this remote corner of India. But Anundoram's deep devotion to literature and his great erudition had won for him the appreciation and admiration of scholars from all over the world. The truth of this is amply borne out by the tributes which are included in the appendix of this book. Anundoram was the first graduate from Assam and the first and the only member of Indian Civil Service from this State.

Anundoram Borooah's entire life was dedicated to literary pursuits. In fact, the story of his brief life may be said to be a story of the love and devotion which inspired his studies of Sanskrit literature. Only a few others can rival him in the zeal that he brought to bear upon his efforts to restore Sanskrit literature to its rightful pre-eminent position. The noble faith that informed his pursuit of Sanskrit literature is clearly expressed in the following words quoted from the book, Mahāviracharita: "To me, Sanskrit is dearer than any other language. Its music has charms which no words can express. Its capability of representing every form of human thought in most appropriate language is probably not rivalled, certainly not surpassed, by any other language. Most touching scenes have been drawn in heart-rending words. Most noble images have been clothed in most sublime language. Most terrific pictures have been couched in terror-producing expressions; and among the foremost to elevate the language and enrich the literature of ancient India stands the name of our poet Vaśyavāk Kāśyapa Bhavabhūti Śrikaṇṭha. His plays have been all translated into English, two by more than one writer, and it can be confidently predicted that before another hundred years, they will be rendered into almost every language of civilized Europe. May we hope that with the diffusion of Sanskrit, he will be as appreciated in the farthest corners of the world as he is on the banks of the Śiprā and near the ruins of Vijayanagara."

There is hardly any scope for adding to what Anundoram Borooah himself had said about this great book in his illuminating and comprehensive preface. It was originally published about a hundred years ago (1877) in three parts. After Monier William's English-Sanskrit Dictionary, Anundoram's is the second lexicon of its kind to be compiled anywhere in the world. This monumental work was regarded as an astonishing achievement by all who were interested in the study of Sanskrit and won the highest praise from eminent scholars, including the great German Sanskritist, Prof Max Müller.

Anundoram was only twenty-three when he had started compiling this great work. He greatly felt the necessity of such a work keeping in view the growing respect for Sanskrit learning in a number of European countries.

The first part of the dictionary was published in 1877. A number of eminent persons got themselves included in the list of buyers of the book even before it was published. Lord Northbrooke, the then Governor General of India, was one of them. In that list also are found from Assam the names of Colonel Sivaram Borah and Colonel Jalnoor Ali Ahmed.

In the preface to the first part of the dictionary, Anundoram had very clearly set forth the plan upon which he would proceed. The English words, according to him, must be classified under three heads while rendering them into Sanskrit. First, the words which have adequate or very near Sanskrit equivalents; secondly, the words having no such adequate equivalents but whose idea and meaning can be expressed in Sanskrit words; and thirdly, the English words which have evolved from new scientific inventions, philosophical thoughts and new ideas but could not be adequately expressed in Sanskrit rendering.

The distinction of Anundoram's dictionary lies in the fact that Anundoram had not only given the adequate Sanskrit equivalent to each English word, but he had also quoted very often the complete Sanskrit sentences, illustrative of the employment of the words, in a bid to express the total meaning of a Sanskrit word in all its aspects. In such a gigantic attempt, he must have been well-versed with all the Sanskrit classics of the kind and the idioms of both Sanskrit and English.

Anundoram had sent the first sixty-four pages of the manuscript to Prof. Max Müller for his comments. Prof. Müller had highly appreciated his endeavour and Anundoram proceeded with great confidence.

The second part of the work was published in 1878 and the third in 1880. In the preface to the second part was incorporated the book, Higher Sanskrit Grammar, and in the preface to the third the book, Ancient Geography of India. The price of the three parts together was fixed at Rs. 40. But in 1887 he reduced it to Rs. 20 for the benefit of all his readers.

Below we quote some outstanding comments by a number of eminent persons of the time on Anundoram's Dictionary.

Lord Northbrooke, Viceroy and Governor General of India, said about the book, "It is of much importance that the study of the learned languages of India should be cultivated by men of education in that country."

Prof. F. Max Müller in a letter to Anundoram said, "Your work is evidently not simply a Sanskrit-English dictionary mechanically inverted, but you have treated each word independently, and by giving the nearest approach to each English word in Sanskrit, you have shown your familiarity with the idioms of both languages. The passages from Sanskrit writers, illustrative of the employment of Sanskrit words, are extremely useful and gives to your work a really scholar-like character".

Prof. Müller had also written in "The Academy" of 13th August, 1881, "We heartily congratulate Mr. Anundoram Borooah on the completion of his English-Sanskrit Dictionary. We have dwelt on former occasions, when noticing the appearance of his first and second volumes, on the great difficulties of such an undertaking, and we have no hesitation in saying that it would be almost impossible for a European Sanskrit scholar to undertake such a work and carry it through successfully. That an English-Sanskrit dictionary cannot be produced by the simple process of putting a Sanskrit-English dictionary topsy-turvy is well known by this time to all scholars. But if we are still without a good English-Greek dictionary, we need not wonder that Sanskrit scholars, even those whose reading has been most extensive, shrink from attempting such a work for English and Sanskrit. Mr. Anundoram Borooah's work is a most creditable beginning in this branch of Sanskrit scholarship, and contains a number of very happy renderings of English words and phrases. But the great difficulty consists in this, that so many ideas are utterly unknown in Sanskrit literature, and words have actually to be framed which if they do not render the original ideas exactly, approximate at all events sufficiently near to become in time their proper equivalents. This process of inventing new words goes constantly in the modern languages of India, chiefly by the aid of Sanskrit, and hence a scholar like Mr. Anundoram Borooah is more likely to hit on possible Indian equivalents for English ideas than even the most learned of Sanskrit scholars in Europe.

"We see, therefore, that Mr. Borooah's English-Sanskrit Dictionary, even when examined by so severe a test as we have applied, supplies us generally with useful suggestions, and will form a safe and solid foundation for future labours in the same direction. Mr. Borooah has added to his third volume a long and important introduction 'On the Ancient Geography of India' and Appendix of 'Geographical Names Rendered in Sanskrit' both of which will be gratefully received by Sanskrit scholars in Europe."

The Hindu Patriot of August 6, 1877 wrote, "Mr. A. Borooah has undertaken a gigantic task—an English-Sanskrit dictionary, and he deserves all praises for the patience and perseverance with which he is pursuing it. We have the first volume of the great work before us. It has been prepared with much care and labour. In the preface the author has set forth the plan upon which he has proceeded. He has classified English words under three heads."

The Englishman of August 6, 1877 said, "Mr. A. Borooah's English-Sanskrit Dictionary will be of great service to students. He has adopted in our opinion the wise course of giving, in many cases, the authorities for the renderings he selects. The object of translating from English into Sanskrit is to gain an accurate literary knowledge of the latter language. No one will require, in this or in any other country, to use the Sanskrit language for business purposes. It is clear, therefore, that Mr. Borooah has much increased the value of the Dictionary by his frequent references to Sanskrit literature.

"It is pleasant to find one of our native Civilians employing his few leisure moments in this occupation. The charge originally brought against them is that they despise the literature and customs of their forefathers.

"Mr. A. Borooah has shown that his mastery of Western thought by no means disqualifies him for the most minute and painstaking study of the ancient literature of his native land. At the same time he has learnt in the West that the object of all study is enlightenment, not obscuration, and he is not ashamed to furnish Mlecchas with the means of clothing their barbarous ideas in elegant Sanskrit. Now that the improvement of the language which is the only key to Hindu customs and Hindu ideas is thoroughly recognised in Europe, we may anticipate that Mr. Borooah's work will obtain all the recognition it deserves. It seems to us far more perfect in its way than the English-Sanskrit vocabularies which aided, or rather worried, the students of twenty years ago. ...It must be admitted that the work will be very useful to those who study Sanskrit with other ends in view than the acquisition of government prizes. Writing makes an accomplished man in Sanskrit as in every other language, and those who wish to acquire an accomplished knowledge of Sanskrit cannot do better than provide themselves with Mr. Anundoram Borooah's work."

Prof. V.S. Apte, in the Preface to his English-Sanskrit Dictionary, has written, "The Dictionary of this sort are two in number, one by Mr. Monier Williams and the other by Mr. A. Borooah of Calcutta. Their prices are prohibitively high. Mr. A. Borooah's work is eminently practical: it abounds with quotations from several standard authors; the renderings are generally happy and the work has at least a classical appearance. The fondness for giving quotations has induced the writer to give several quotations for illustrating such words as गम, इति, तत्र etc. of the meaning of which there is no doubt nor is any confirmation needed....

"It now remains for me to do the grateful duty of acknowledging my obligations to those that have assisted me in the preparation of the Dictionary in one form or another. Foremost amongst them stand the work of Mr. Borooah and Prof. Williams both of which I have most frequently consulted. Monier Williams' Dictionary, though inferior in several respects to Mr. Borooah's, has several happy renderings of short words and expressions, especially where ideas purely English have to be clothed in a Sanskrit garb, and I have freely referred to the learned Prof.'s valuable renderings. But my acknowledgements are chiefly due to Mr. Borooah from whose work I have derived much substantial assistance, in the suggestions of equivalent words and phrases, more particularly from his numerous quotations, from such works as were not accessible to me or being accessible I had no time to go through them."

The chief object of the Publication Board, Assam, established in 1959, has been to publish and reprint the best works in different languages and thus help the enrichment of our language, literature and culture through contact with all that is best in world literature. It is this object that has inspired this Board to reprint the works of Anundoram Borooah. We are confident that our efforts will have goodwill and support of all who sympathise with our aims.

We must acknowledge here our debt of gratitude to that famous scholar and historian of Assam, the late Dr. Surya Kumar Bhuyan, who more than anybody else, was responsible for acquainting the present generation with the genius and achievements of Anundoram Borooah. In this connection, we refer to Dr. Bhuyan's memorable biography of Anundoram, written in Assamese. The biographical sketch included in this book and the note on Anundoram in the Appendix have been reproduced from Dr. Bhuyan's book. We offer our grateful thanks to Srijuta Laksheswari Bhuyan, wife of Dr. Bhuyan, and the publishers of the book, the Lawyer's Book Stall, Gauhati, for kindly permitting us to use the material.

We are deeply grateful to Dr. V. Raghavan, the Sanskrit scholar of international repute, for kindly writing the Foreword of this book.

With this national enterprise will also remain associated the names of our ex-Chief Minister, the late Sri Bimala Prasad Chaliha, and Sri Mahendra Mohan Chaudhury, the present Chief Minister and Chairman of this Board, who took a keen interest in the publication of the books by Anundoram Borooah. We owe also a debt of gratitude to the Principal, Sanskrit College of Calcutta, for lending us the three volumes of Anundoram Borooah for preparing the manuscript of this work. But for his help this volume could not have been published.

Finally, a word of thanks is also due to Prof. Rajanikanta Dev Sarma, who carefully and conscientiously corrected the proofs including errors of misprint of the original.

PREFACE TO FIRST VOLUME

By Anundoram Borooah

The want of a practical English-Sanskrit Dictionary is felt so much at the present time that it calls for no apology for an attempt to remove that want, although it will probably be unanimously admitted that the task is beset with the greatest difficulties. Sanskrit has long ceased to be a living language and its antiquity has been mixed up with all that imagination could inspire and veneration could support. Its grand and varied literature is, to a considerable extent, shut up in distant manuscripts and special works on special subjects have yet received but very scanty attention. A variety of causes has alienated the modern dialects from their mother tongue, making it often unsafe to draw any inferences from their usage. *The Light of the West has not yet even spread over the surface of our society and any deviations from the established opinions will be set down by our veteran Sanskritists as audacious and preposterous. It will be considered foolishness to maintain that our revered grammarian Pāṇini did not exhaust the subject of idioms,† although my critics will probably agree with me that the father of grammar was ignorant of any other refined language and was not therefore in a position to treat the subject fully. It will be considered arrogance to assert that our popular lexicographer Amara siṁha confounded the language of conversation with "theatrical language", although it may be shewn that such language is not confined to the drama, but used alike in prose and poetry, in the romances and tales.‡ It will be considered imprudence to question the correctness of his definitions and lay bare the mistakes in his grouping of synonymous terms, although there may be the strongest grounds and the clearest evidence to the contrary.§

2. These are some of the difficulties in the way of this attempt—difficulties which would probably stagger the most accomplished scholar of the day. They are doubly telling on a man of

---

*It must, however, be admitted that they are sometimes of very great use in determining the exact sense of words, which have been clearly defined by any Sanskrit lexicographer. Take, for instance, the word पिच्छिल. The Bengali word पिछल् derived from it, shews its exact meaning and clears the apparent obscurity of such passages as रणाङ्गणे शोणितपङ्कपिच्छले.

†The great commentators of Pāṇini were aware of his omissions, although they filled them up in a circuitous way. Take, for instance, the use of the plural in the case of proper names in the sense of family or race. This is not to be found in the Aṣṭaka, but supplied by the commentators. But there are other idioms which, so far as my knowledge extends, are not noticed by any grammarian. Take, for instance, the use of the demonstrative pronouns with the personal pronouns. The cause of these omissions is apparent. Our ancestors had all the advantages of a spoken tongue—knew the language thoroughly—and used the idioms correctly, without being able to perceive that there was any thing to remark about them.

‡Take, for instance, the word देवी. In the Amara Koṣa, it is stated that a queen is called देवी in theatrical language. If Amara Siṁha had said "in addressing," he would have been half correct, for in no dramatic work a queen of a country is called its देवी. But it is not difficult to shew that the term is not confined to the drama. I will not quote Kādambarī which may be regarded as a poem by the conservative Sanskritists but refer for its use to the fifth tale in the first part of the simple Panchatantra, which never smells of inflated style and does not come under the technical definition of poem.

§For instance, he groups together पञ्चता, कालधर्म, दिष्टान्त, प्रलय, अत्यय, अन्त, नाश, मृत्यु, मरण, निधन The only equivalents of death in this group are मृत्यु and मरण. The other words respectively mean "fivefold stage", "effect of time", "fated end", "dissolution", "departure", "end", "destruction", "perishing" and as in English sometimes signify death. (Comp. "we expected immediate dissolution", Tilton). But if these words are to be reckoned as synonyms of death, we might as well include दीर्घनिद्रा, दीर्घप्रवास, दीर्घतमस्, स्वर्गगमन, and a hundred other similar expressions. To this illogical and mischievous grouping of words is to be ultimately traced the servere, but most unjust remarks of the historian Mill about the capabilities of the Sanskrit language as a medium of conveying one's thoughts correctly and accurately.

my humble acquirements, conscious alike of the poverty of intellectual gifts which are necessary for its execution and of the inability to devote uninterrupted and long-continued attention which is essential for its success. And I can assure my readers that I should have gladly left it to those, who add profound knowledge of Sanskrit to high philological attainments and have successfully used their powers in the highest intellectual achievements. But, unfortunately, Sanskrit researches seem yet to attract but very few scholars, and I know of none who is employing or is about to employ his abilities in the elucidation of this branch of study. It is, therefore, with some reluctance that I am devoting my leisure hours in the compilation of this work, neither intending nor pretending to produce a comprehensive work, but with a view to remove some of the difficulties in the way of this very interesting language and to make it approach the level of the classics of the West. The work is expected to be complete in* three volumes of not less than 600 pages each and I now present the first volume with the hope that, in the absence of any other work of the kind, it may be of some use to the students of the most copious, most refined, most philosophical language of the world—students whose number is everyday increasing and every day spreading all over the civilized world.

3. I may now explain the plan of my work. For the purpose of my dictionary, English words naturally fall under three classes: (1) those for which there are exact or very near equivalents, in Sanskrit; (2) those for which there are no equivalents, but the phrases in which they occur and the ideas conveyed by them are represented by different modes of expression; and (3) those which have evolved from new discoveries in science and thought and for which there are no equivalents or equivalent modes of expression.

4. With respect to the words of the first class, the principle I have kept in view is to give only the nearest Sanskrit equivalents for the English words. To do otherwise would be to swell the list of the pseudo-synonymous terms without giving the reader any insight into their real senses and disabling him from using them in their proper places. I have also tried to exclude all pedantical words which seldom occur except in the Sanskrit vocabularies. When I have retained them, I have marked them as 'rare' or annexed a letter A to shew that they are principally to be found in the vocabularies like the Amarakoṣa. I hope it will enable the reader to have firmer grasp over the more useful terms.

5. The task of selection is, however, not so easy as may appear at first sight. There are Sanskrit words which are etymological equivalents of English words, but are practically very seldom, if ever, used in the strict etymological sense. Take, for instance, the word सोदर. It is etymologically equivalent to uterine and now that Anglicisms are fast entering into our vernaculars, even some of our countrymen do not hesitate to use the word as an equivalent of uterine. Little do they think that the social condition of our women differed and differ from the social condition of Western women and our ancestors meant by सोदर not only of the same womb but by the same father also. The second marriage of a Hindu woman was quite abnormal and rare in the days of classical Sanskrit and we have a quite different expression for it. Kalluka, for instance, uses अन्यपितृज, i.e. "born of a different father" to indicate this relation and I have little doubt that my readers will agree with me in thinking that it is in complete accordance with the ideas of our ancestors.

6. Then there are what I may term accidental equivalents, that is, words which do not represent the real sense of the English words, but are practically used for them in a limited sense

*The size of the work will be much larger than I expected in March 1876. I am sorry I have in consequence to raise the price of the work and to publish it in three instead of two volumes. I also regret the delay in its appearance owing to causes which I need not allude to. But I hope the second volume will be more punctually out by the beginning and the third by the end of the next year.

or for a limited class of ideas. Take, for instance, the word णिजन्त. This word literally means ending in णिच्. According to the quibbles of Pāṇini, Sanskrit causal verbs are णिजन्त and are therefore called णिजन्त. But the word will never be applied to causal verbs of other languages, and I consider it wrong to apply the term as causal. In such cases, I have taken the greatest care to find out and give the real equivalents and to explain the meaning and usage of the accidental equivalents.

7. It must also be remembered that distinctions observed in Sanskrit are not always observed in English and vice versa. Words, which are only allied to each other in one language, are sometimes represented by one and the same word in another language, the shades of difference being subordinated to the prominent idea conveyed by them all. In such cases, I have always tried to explain the broad distinctions observed in Sanskrit. I have also tried to note the distinctions observed in English, when such distinctions are not hostile to the spirit of the former language. The object of this work is to explain the niceties of Sanskrit and not of English and I have thought it improper to enter into a field which would involve the invention of unnecessary words or modes of expression.

8. In the case of the second class of words, I have not coined words to murder the idiom of the language, but have illustrated their use by citations from classical writers. Take, for instance, the word scenery. There is no equivalent in Sanskrit for this word, but the idea was known to our ancestors and there are numerous instances of its use. I have given some examples and I hope my readers will feel no difficulty in understanding how the idea is expressed in Sanskrit and how to handle the mode of expression in other combinations.

9. With reference to the third class of words, my views almost coincide with those expressed not long ago by our distinguished countryman Dr. Rajendra Lal Mitra. To coin new equivalents, expressive of the prominent ideas conveyed by new scientific and philosophical terms, is not only in harmony with the genius of the Sanskrit language, whose pliancy and malleability are unsurpassed but is likely to facilitate the study of science and philosophy among our countrymen, who are not acquainted with foreign tongues. It not only eliminates the repulsive character of hard uncouth foreign terms, but at the same time impresses the memory with certain ideas or attributes which must necessarily be associated with those terms. When this object cannot be attained, it is better to retain them in Sanskrit garb and in such cases, I have either done this or explained the sense in Sanskrit. In the case of some new words, I am indebted to the labours of my predecessors, but in many cases, I have taken on myself the responsibility of their introduction, when I have found that the force of the English words are not well expressed by their words. But I have marked all new words with asterisks to shew my readers that they are not sanctioned by classical usage and to enable them to use other words should these inventions be found fault with.

10. Besides simple words, there are many compound words and phrases which must necessarily be taken cognizance of in a work of this kind. But in such cases, my object has been to give idiomatic, but not necessarily, literal equivalents. For instance, I give दिनमणि as the equivalent of "day-star" not because मणि corresponds with star, but because the compound fully expresses the idea of the English expression and has been used in the same sense by Sanskrit writers.

11. With these preliminary remarks, I may say that I have prominently marked the different senses of English words, specially when they are represented by different Sanskrit equivalents. I have used much care to find out the nearest and most common equivalents in each sense and taken great pains to arrange them according to their usefulness and frequency. I have attempted to note their construction briefly, when peculiar or different from the construction of the corresponding English words. I have tried to illustrate their use by citations from classical writers, specially when my readers are apt to misunderstand their use in combination with other words. The laws of growth, development and ramifications of words are probably the same all over the world and I have strived to exemplify this not only by shewing that the same words with the same original senses are used in both the languages in many same secondary senses, but also by noticing some of the most remarkable coincidences in what may appear at first sight, their most peculiar idioms. I have kept in view the great difficulty of the particles of the English language and tried to go thoroughly into them by sufficiently illustrating the different shades of meaning as differently expressed in Sanskrit. Verbs followed by particles are often used in English in quite different senses from the original verbs and many English phrases, such as arising from, be awake, belonging to, feel ashamed, of age are generally peculiarly expressed in Sanskrit. I have put both such compound verbs and phrases before the prominent notice of my readers by inserting them among the words themselves.

12. Obsolete and technical words of rare occurrence have no place in my dictionary. I have also for the most part omitted to record nominal compounds and participles. For the former, my readers must look to the simple words which form the compounds and for the latter ample information will be to found in the published Sanskrit grammars. To include them will be to increase the size of the book without in the least enhancing its utility. With the same object, I have made as few repetitions as possible. If the student does not find sufficient information under any word, he is requested to look to the references made. If the student does not find a phrase under any of its components, he must not give up that it does not occur at all in my work before the other components are looked into. For instance, the phrase tooth and nail is given under nail and he must not despair if he does not find it under tooth. This absence of repetition is of some inconvenience to the student, but it will be more than compensated by the consequent reduction of the bulk of my work and comparative cheapness of its price.

13. As to the mechanical part of my work, I must first draw the attention of my readers to the abbreviations explained on pages 25 to 26*. I should also add that every English word has been mostly expressed by its first letter followed by a dot, when any example is cited under it. For instance, under ADMIRE, "admired by the assembled gods" is printed "a.d by the assembled gods." The same letter a. means act under ACT, allow under ALLOW, and so on.

14. As regards the Sanskrit part of my work, I have, in the case of substantives, either given the singular number of the nominative case or when the base cannot be easily inferred from it, the base with its gender or genders in brackets. In the case of adjectives, when the base is the same for all the three genders, as विजन्मन्, I have given the base and marked (mfn.) within brackets. When the base is the same for two genders, I have either given this base and the other base with gender within brackets, or given the nominative singular in the masculine gender, and indicated the nominative singular in the other two genders within brackets. In the case of verbs, I have given the third person singular present tense and exhibited the root in brackets—the root such as would be under a rational classification and not necessarily what is given in Sanskrit works on roots. Adverbs are generally expressed by certain cases of the corresponding substantives and adjectives. But they are practically indeclinable and require no explanation. The prepositions are mostly put after the words they govern.

15. In this place, I may also remark that the formation of Sanskrit compounds is in many cases almost unlimited. In such cases, I have satisfied myself by giving some typical examples and leaving the student to form other compounds on the same plan.

16. I am indebted to Dr. Smith's English-Latin Dictionary for the plan of my work. I have also received much assistance from Wilson's Sanskrit-English Dictionary, Monier Williams's English-Sanskrit Dictionary, Webster's English Dictionary, Sabda Kalpa Druma, and a few other works.

17. In conclusion, I must express my thanks to the Governments of the Punjab and N. W. Provinces for subscribing to my work and to Lord Northbrooke for being the first and foremost to encourage its publication.* I should also thank my other subscribers for their encouragements and to the Indian Press generally for taking a kind notice of it. Nor must I omit to thank professor Max Müller, the most renowned, if not the most accomplished scholar of the day, for his very favourable opinion on the first 64 pages of this work, which has not a little encouraged me to persevere in these very difficult, however interesting, researches. Irrespective of the disadvantages under which I lie, a first attempt of this nature must necessarily contain many mistakes and omissions and I shall be under great obligations to my readers and reviewers if they would favour me with their remarks and general suggestions, as it would be not only assisting the cause of Sanskrit but possibly also of its modern descendants.

PREFACE TO SECOND VOLUME

By Anundoram Borooah

In the preface to the first volume, I have fully explained the plan of my work. But some parts of it have been misunderstood in certain quarters and objections have been taken first to my including words which have no equivalents in Sanskrit, secondly to my differing from my predecessors in coining equivalents for scientific and philosophical terms, and thirdly to my not giving all English words.

2. To the first objection, I plead guilty with the whole body of respectable European Lexicographers. They have felt that positive knowledge is as much of use as negative knowledge—it is as good to know that a word has its representative in another language as to know that it has no representative: and I am not sorry that I have deferred to their combined authority. It is a truism which cannot be denied, that words which have no equivalents in another language are to be retained in that language, when it is found that coined words would be as unsuitable to express their sense as long round about sentences, and the analogy of languages shews that, in such cases, the words are to be assimilated to the languages in which they are adopted. For homely examples, I may refer to the words which have been bodily adopted in English from the dialects of India.

But I will not rest there. Sanskrit itself contains abundant examples to illustrate my meaning. होरा* and हरिज†, सेर and मण‡, भिल्ल¶ and पह्लव§ and hundreds of similar tersm unmistakeably shew that in adopting foreign words Sanskrit does not lose sight of putting a Sanskrit garb on them. This serves a double purpose—of naturalizing the words and of fixing their spelling, neither of which is to be disregarded. It will probably be admitted that these considerations require that all English words are to be retained in an English-Sanskrit Dictionary.

3. There is another reason. I do not pretend to a comprehensive and thorough knowledge of Sanskrit. Words that are considered by me to have no representatives are either known to other scholars to have representatives or may hereafter be found to have representatives with the light of unpublished and hitherto unexplored texts. Some years ago, while I was reading with a highly respected if not distinguished Sanskrit scholar, we were told that the fruits imported from Cabool had no names in Sanskrit. The Bhāva Prakāśa is now with me, and I can authoritatively say how far the opinion of the learned scholar is correct. So with other classes of words. Till the whole field of Sanskrit Literature is fully explored*, it is presumptuous not only for a man of my limited knowledge, but for the highest and most deeply read scholar to lay down, except to a very

* Almost every branch of science had special works and only a few are beginning to be printed. I may mention special works on elephants, horses, chariots etc. "कच्चित् सूत्राणि सर्वाणि गृह्णासि भरतर्षभ ! हस्तिसूत्राश्वसूत्राणि रथसूत्राणि वा विभो ।।" Mah. ii. 5. 120. Nīla Kaṇṭha, who is a modern commentator, is satisfied with stating "अश्वादीनां लक्षण-परीक्षाचिकित्सौषधोद्दीपनोन्मादनादिप्रकारप्रतिपादकग्रन्थान्." But we learn more from the commentaries of Mallinātha. To "विनीतनागः किल सूत्रकारैरैन्द्रं पदं भूमिगतोऽपि भुंक्ते" of Raghu. iv. 27, he adds "सूत्रकारैर्गजशास्त्रकृद्भिः पालकादिभिर्महर्षिभिः", In his notes to the fifth canto of Śiśupāla Vadha, he mentions three works on horses—Haya Līlābatī, Revata, and the compilation of Bhoja Rāja. The Sūtras have probably gone away with time. But modern compilations have not all perished. Our Calcutta friends, with abundant leisure, will do well to turn the attention to this field, which has not yet been touched by any scholar eastern or western, but nevertheless of immense interest to the readers of Sanskrit. I will here quote second-hand a passage from Bhoja Rāja (Mallināth's note to Śiśupāla Vadha v. 10.)— slight extent, that such and such classes of words have no representatives in Sanskrit and it appears to me to be best that such words should not be left wholly unnoticed in an English-Sanskrit Dictionary.

4. To the second objection, I cannot so strong reply as I cannot be the judge of my own work. But I have already stated in the preface to the first volume, that I have differed from my predecessors only when I have considered their labours not very successful. My views may be faulty—my labours may have been wasted, but it is not correct to say that I have paid no attention to their teachings.

5. It is a notorious fact that the first workers in a field are led away by superficial identities and I will be pardoned for attributing the same fault to some of my predecessors. Every title page of a Bengali Book shows the stamp of English idiom*. Good many of the Bengalized words shew touchy consideration for the roots of words†. But the evil is not confined to the vernacular. It is very prevalent among many of the comparatively modern Pandits. The Sanskrit translation of geometry made by Yogadhyāna Miśra about 50 years ago, is so faulty in this respect that with the new light of Kern's Āryabhaṭīya, I regret very much that I had recourse to it for geometric terms. Not confining to using words in senses in which they are never used and of coining words where there were good equivalents, be retains the whole English alphabet and calls his figures by अ, ब, स, ड, etc. which neither in sound nor in appearance nor in sense resemble English a, b, c, d, etc. for which they stand.

6. To the third objection, I will remind my readers that I do not undertake a comprehensive Dictionary. Even such a work as Webster's Dictionary—the labour of many years on the relies of many learned scholars, is not only deficient in such words as Trench has commented on, but also such common phrases as be over, get into, get up (intrans). Mine is a much humbler undertaking and it cannot contain all the words of the English language.

7. But these are mere fleshy excrecenses, the knowledge of which will not materially assist in learning a language—labours on which will be always subject to diverse criticims. The words which form the backbone of a language—about which there is but one opinion and which should be thoroughly learnt both to understand it and to make one's thoughts intelligible to others, have received far greater attention from me. Even in these, I am conscious of my frailties and the very imperfect state of my work. But I do hope that my labours have not been wholly wasted and some success attained.

8. To make my meaning intelligible, I give a few instances. Take the Sanskrit word नव,, Latin novus, Greek neos, Persian nao, Anglo-Saxon niwe, English new. Webster devotes seven paragraphs to it, and gives the following meanings.

(1) Having existed or having been made, but a short time, having originated or occurred lately; recent; fresh...
(2) Not before seen, made acquainted with, or known.....
(3) Starting anew, renovated; commencing.....
(4) Not ancient; modern, not of ancient existence.....
(5) Not worn out, defaced by use or the like.....
(6) Not habituated, not similar; unaccustomed.....
(7) Fresh from anything; newly-come.....

both to shew the nature of the work and illustrate its teachings. "मृदुनैकेन घातेन दण्डकालेषु ताडयेत् । तीक्ष्णं मध्यं पुनर्द्वाभ्यां जघन्यं निष्ठुरैस्त्रिभिः । उपवेशे च निद्रायां स्खलिते दुश्चेष्टिते । वडवालोकनौत्सुक्ये बहुगर्वितह्लेषिते । सन्त्रासे च दुरुत्थाने विमार्गगमने भये । शिक्षात्यागस्य समये सञ्जाते चित्तविभ्रमे । दण्डः प्रयोज्यो वाहानां कालेसु द्वादशस्वपि । ग्रीवायां भीतमाहन्यात् त्रस्तं चैव च वाजिनम् । विभ्रान्तचित्तमधरे त्यक्तशिक्षञ्च ताडयेत् । प्रहेषितं स्कन्धबाह्वोर्वडवालोकिनं तथा । उपवेशे च निद्रायां कटिदेशे च ताडयेत् । दुश्चेष्टितं मुखे हन्यादुन्मार्गप्रस्थितं तथा । जघने स्खलितं हन्यान्नेत्रमार्गे दुरुत्थितम् । यः कुण्ठप्रकृतिर्वाजी तं सर्वत्रैव ताडयेत् ।

* It is good English to say that a work is by so and so. But it is not Bengali to say अमुक पुस्तक अमुककृत. Yet the Anglicism is retained in every book almost imperceptibly.

† Hippopotamus is rendered सिन्धुघोटक evidently because it means in Greek river-horse. But I believe the author of the word never saw the animal and it is doubtful whether he would have called it a घोटक if he had seen it.

9. Wilson, who gave an English form to the then existing Sanskrit lexicons, says of नव simply "new". Monier Williams, who admittedly inverted his Dictionary in 1851, apparently concluded from this that नव was restricted only to the first of the above senses and gives different equivalents under the subheadings "modern", "not ancient", "never occurring before", "not habituated", "not familiar", "not before used." Little did he think that when "new" is used in any of these senses, it always retains the idea of "newness" and conveys something different from the equivalents specified under these heads. A "new empire" is different from "a modern empire", many new empires of old being ancient and not modern empires. A "new metal" is not the same as a "metal never occurring before", it being a metal newly discovered and retaining that name after discovery, until it is considered old; and so on.*

10. The history of the word is probably the same in every Aryan language, and with a few exceptions, the same word has risen through perceptible stages into the advanced ideas of "new man", "new hand" etc. The examples I have quoted from standard Sanskrit writers will clearly illustrate this as regards Sanskrit and similiar examples will be found in most of the languages of this family.

11. But the similarity of growth is not confined to words clearly traceable to the same origin. It is seen even in words whose common origin is at least exceedingly doubtful. Take for instance the English "great", Sanskrit महत्. Originally applied to things, both the words have gradually grown to apply to a variety of ideas as will appear from the examples I have given. Monier Williams gives a large paragraph to it, but except the first word and the last few lines partially, the whole of it is quite irrelevant and out of the mark.

12. As another example, take the English word "honour" and Sanskrit मान. Each has the same history and is applied to the same variety of ideas. Monier Williams gives it the more insignificant place and even there, not correct in assigning its gender.†

13. From words the study of which must be of great interest to the historical students of language, I turn to words the full appreciation of which must be eagerly sought by every careful, student of Sanskrit. Take for example, the common verb ज्वल् as applied to the burning of lights. It is a sense of every importance being the only representative of the English idea in Sanskrit, as may be seen from some of the vernaculars; and yet it does not find a place in the Dictionaries I have consulted, and for this reason that the verbs have been completely neglected by our home lexicographers.

14. Turning to nouns, take the pair of words वयस् and आयुस्, which are clearly distinguished in every vernacular I know and never confounded by any Sanskrit writer of repute. The first is the exact equivalent for English "age", while the second means life-time—the whole of a man's age as it is or as it should be. For instance, when we wish a man a long life, we never apply the word वयस् to it: when we say a man is of middle age, we never apply the word आयुस् to it. But in a few examples, आयुस् may be rendered into English by the word "age." In such cases not that आयुस् loses its proper sense, but "age" is applied to "whole age", "life", "life-time". This has led to a great deal of confusion among English writers. For instance, Wilson says शतायुस् (mfn.)="a man a hundred years old". Monier Williams follows him and inverting, gives twice under "hundred" and again under "old" a hundred years old=शतायुस्. But the compound can never have the meaning

* I am sorry that I have not by me to compare the Dictionaries of Benfey, Roth, Gold-stuker and the Sanskrit Dictionary of Monier Williams. But considering that some of the mistakes are repeated in the latest Dictionary in preparation, I presume I have not been anticipated in all that I say.

† मान in the sense of measure is neuter, in the sense of honour always masculine. Wilson has noted this, as well as other Dictionaries I have consulted. The rules of Pāṇini on gender and derivation shew this clearly.

given by these Sanskritists. Take for instance the well known instance शतायुर्वै पुरुषः* According to these writers it would mean "a man hundred years old", whereas it means "hundred years is the measure of man's life." It is not a particular expression referring to a particular individual, but a general expression referring to the whole mankind.

15. Turning to another class of words, take the pronominal forms इयत्, एतावत् and तावत्. Wilson does not distinguish them and Monier Williams seems to confound them altoghether. It is not the less true that the first two forms may be used either absolutely or dependantly, but can never be used with the form यावत्; while the third is always used with यावत् expressed or understood and never used absolutely. When for instance it is said "so much of such a thing is required for so much work," we may use एतावत् . . . एतावत्, इयत् . . . एतावत्, एतावत् . . . इयत्, or इयत् . . . इयत्, but can never use तावत्. When, for instance, it is said it requires so much labour that . . . we must use either एतावत् or इयत्. On the other hand, when it is said, "so much as", "as much as", "so many as", "as many as", we must use, the forms तावत्. . . यावत्, and conversely यावत् . . . तावत् "for as many as . . . so many", "as much . . . so much" . . .

16. Turning to special names, take the word भ्रमर out of the animal kingdom. Amara, who is fond of including different species under the same head, does not classify it with मधुमक्षिका and the chapter of the Bhāva Prakāśa on honey contains a tolerably good account of them. Wilson commits no mistake about it. But Monier Williams leaves out the general expression and gives it as the proper equivalent for "bee". If it was an unimportant word in the Sanskrit Literature, I should have laid no stress on its proper meaning. But Sanskrit Poetry abounds with its allusions and many a beauty will be missed, if it is accepted as an equivalent for "bee". Take, for instance, the familiar passage in the first act of the Śakuntalā, where a भ्रमर comes near Śakuntalā almost to kiss her lips and buzzes about her face. Is this natural for common bees ? Has any body seen a bee to do this ? It will probably be said "no, it is the poet's creation". Not the least. Kālidāsa's creative power was great, but not at the sacrifice of nature. I can speak from personal experience and those who have studied the habits of these humble bees will bear me out that every word of Kālidāsa's description is true to nature. It is known as भोमरा in vernacular and those who wish to test my assertion may do so by consulting the people.

17. Coming down to the vegetable kingdoms take the word, melon, water-melon, musk-melon. Each has a different name in the vernacular, and melon is broadly distinguished from the other two. Monier Williams pays no regard to the distinction and under melon gives the equivalents for water-melon. But unlike other cases, he notes that the equivalents are for water-melon, although that will not help the student a bit in finding out the name for melon. I have given the equivalents for each of these words.

18. In the mineral kingdom, I cannot say that my labours have been successful, but I can say that I have not altogether neglected the field. Take for example the word वैदूर्य which Wilson calls the lapis lazuli, but I call the cat's eye. I base this conclusion on the ground that it is always compared by Sanskrit poets with cat's eye. For instance, in the Mahābhārata Śanti Parva, chapter 38, Bombay edition, the 67th verse is—

ततस्तीक्ष्णाग्रदशनो मणिवैदूर्यलोचनः ।
मूषिकं मन्दमुद्वीक्ष्य मार्जारो लोमशोऽब्रवीत् ॥

* As this mistake has been repeated by Pandit Tārānāth Tarkavāchaspati in his Sabdastoma Mahānidhi, I will quote authorities in support of my view. R. I. 23. has "मदीयाः प्रजाः पुरुषायुषजीविन्यः" and Mallināth says "आयुर्जीवित काल: । पुरुषस्यायुः पुरुषायुषं वर्शशतमित्यर्थः । शतायुर्वै पुरुष इति श्रुतेः । Su. I. 21. has "परमायुः शतं तस्य" and Ranganātha explains "शतं शतवर्षपरिमितमायुः शरीरधारणकालः ।" Under Ṛg-Veda x. 18. 5., Sāyaṇa says "जीवानामायूंषि जीवनानि कल्पय". It is useless to multiply authorities. आयुस् can never have the meaning given by Williams in any of these instances.

The second half of the 45th verse of the third canto of the Śiśupāla runs thus—

विद्युर्विडालेक्षणभीषणाभ्यः
वैदूर्यकुड्येषु शशिद्युतिभ्यः ॥

वैदूर्य literally means 'produced at a distance' and the विश्वकोष gives the mountain Balavaya as the place where it is found. It is for the mineralogist to say whether my conclusion is correct. But I can say that we have other names for the lapis lazuli.

19. If, in these and similar instances, my labours have been successful, I hope they have not been wholly fruitless in the important field of Sanskrit Syntax. The labours of European Scholars in the field of Sanskrit Grammar have in more than one point been very successful. The labyrinths of declension and conjugation have been unravelled, their intricacies laid bare and the rules methodized on a rational system. Differing on the one hand from the generalizing mazes of Pāṇini which are to be brought to bear on every instance, on the other from the numberless special rules of Vidyāsāgara which memory can not retain the method pursued by these scholars is the best calculated to give the student within the shortest possible time a fair acquaintance with the structure of the language. But not so with syntax. Our forefathers did not fully expound the subject and with the light of mere book learning, foreigners must feel difficulty to comprehend it. Indeed there are some writers, as for instance, Professor Monier Williams, who have made a complete mess of it. The rules of Pāṇini have not been carefully studied: the idioms of the vernacular have not been consulted: and exceptions and deviations have been mistaken for general rules, so that even in the abundant examples quoted, shades of difference have been completely ignored and almost every case is made to yield every sense and to agree with every collocation of words. For instance, nothing can be clearer than the use of the accusative to denote time throughout which an action continues and of the instrumental for the time during which a thing is done. But Monier Williams considers that there is confusion in their use and actually quotes two instances as if in support of his view.* The little words on which these uses are rivetted are but little studied and often completely neglected. I have devoted the deepest attention to them and hope there has been some success in bringing their apparent irregularities into order. As an instance, I may refer to the word 'if' where I believe for the first time, I have collected the rules for the use of what is called in English the subjunctive mood. It will be seen how clearly they agree with the rules of Latin Grammar, to which in fact I owe that arrangement.

20. There are people who are fond of mere gloss and glitter—of ponderous volumes with long trains of words and incorporation of whole treaties. They are dazzled with the size and do not stop to examine the contents. It is immaterial whether they find anything to recommend in my book. But there are scholars who are conscious of the time the intellectual world loses in disputes about terms for which there ought to be no dispute and about expressions and constructions which are as clear as high noon. I honestly hope that they will allow that my hard labours have not all been in a false direction. To illustrate what I mean, I give an instance second hand, as original examples may be considered begging the question. "Old" in English and the cognate languages is used both in the sense of "aged" and in the sense of "ancient". It is used equally of persons, things, and ideas. But not so वृद्ध in Sanskrit and the languages derived from it. It is never applied to old practices, old rules etc. Yet such a simple phrase as वृद्धव्यवहार* has been misunderstood and become the subject of great discussion.

* These and similiar mistakes are repeated in the Dictionary. But द्वादशभिर्वर्षैः can never mean "for twelve years" and कतिपयदिवसैः "for a few days." The passages are not quoted at length. On examination, it will be found that they mean respectively "in twelve years", "in a few days." As another instance, I may mention his putting चेत् in the beginning of sentences, whereas it can never stand in that place.

21. It has been pointed out to me by Professor Max-Muller and my friend Mr. R. C. Dutt that I have not been always very precise in referring to authorities. I thank them heartily for the suggestion and have tried to act up to it. It will be seen that not only in small books like the Raghuvaṁśa but also in the biggest works as the Mahābhārata I have latterly often given the most precise references. But it will be remembered that it is most difficult to do so in prose literature although I had often to refer to it and about many Calcutta editions, where no attention is paid to numbering the verses. In medical works, the subjects are very clearly marked and it is unecessary to refer to them precisely. So in some other cases.

22. I have now the pleasant duty to thank warmly my friends and critics, who have encouraged the continuance and publication of this work. Knowledge for itself is so little valued in this country—there is such wide-spread abject deference to the language of our rulers—the sphere of such action is so limited—there is so little communication and sympathy between the different parts of India, that I cannot too highly express my obligations for such encouragement and advice.

SHORT BIOGRAPHY OF ANUNDORAM BOROOAH

Introductory: The latter half of the nineteenth century witnessed a glorious band of workers in the field of Sanskrit research in India. This gifted brotherhood included among its members the late R. C. Dutta, Raja Rajendralal Mitra, Swami Dayananda Saraswati, Pandit Indraji Bhavani, Sir Ramkrishna Gopal Bhandarkar and Anundoram Borooah. The last, by dint of his earnestness of purpose and his life-long devotion to the cause of Sanskrit scholarship, has won an imperishable name in the annals of Indian Sanskrit research. Thirty-five or forty years ago, no Indian savant's name had excited greater admiration and applause than Borooah's and this feeling was rightly echoed in the Lahore Tribune of those days,—"Sri Borooah's Sanskrit scholarship is as profound and accurate as it is extensive. We are proud of him as a nation, and we earnestly hope that our brightest youths may follow his noble though very arduous path."

Borooah was a member of the Indian Civil Service, and was for some years in charge of a heavy district in Bengal. The scope of his work and the range of his scholastic investigations which he strenuously carried on in the midst of his busy official duties show him, to quote Prof. Cecil Bendall's words in the Trubner's Record, 1889, "to have been a kindred spirit with administrators like Colebrooke and Burnell among the illustrious dead, and the small band of living workers like Grierson, Fleet and R. C. Temple".

Borooah is a fine flower of western culture. The profound erudition of the oriental scholar combined with the critical spirit of the west, imparted to Borooah's works a peculiar value and lustre. As the greatest intellectual representative of the "benighted province of Assam", Borooah is the glory of the Assamese; and Assam has not produced a greater man during the space of ninety-five years that she has come under British rule. His name has been an example and an inspiration to thousands of the youths of Assam.

Life: Anundoram Borooah, B.A., I.C.S., Barrister-at-Law, was born in May, 1850, at North Gauhati in the district of Kamrup, Assam. This Kamrup forms at present only a fragment of the greater Kamrupa Empire of yore, hallowed by the names of Narakasur, Bhagadatta, Bana, Bhaskara Varma, Naranarayan, Pratap Singha Swargadeo and Rudra Singha Swargadeo among her kings; Jongal Balahu, Cilarai and Lachit Bar Phukon among her heroes and soldiers; Usha, Rukmini, Behula, Joymati and Phuleswari Barkuanri among her women; Dak, Sankar Deva, Madhava Deva, Purusottam Vidyabagish and Anundoram Dhekial Phukon among her saints and literateurs; and Momai Tamooli Barborooah and Rajmantri Purnananda Buragohain among her ministers and statesmen. Anundoram belonged to the well-known Majindar Borooah family of Assam. His father, an Assamese gentleman of the older type, was for some years a Sadar Amin, a post equivalent to a modern Deputy Magistrateship.

Through the efforts of his learned father, Anundoram was initiated into the vast poentialities of the Deva Bhasha even during his childhood. With the help of an erudite Sanskrit Pandit who was appointed to teach him Sanskrit, Anundoram mastered and got by heart the whole of the immortal lexicon Amarakosha before he was fourteen, at which age he also passed the Entrance Examination of the Calcutta University. He read for the first Arts Examination in the Presidency College of Calcutta, and there he had as his teachers the great educationists, Mahamahopadhyaya Mohesh Chandra Nyayaratna, C.I.E. in Sanskrit, and Sir (then Sri) Gurudas Banerji in Mathematics. Boroorah had as his class-mates the late R. C. Dutt, I.C.S., B. L. Gupta, I.C.S., and Kartick Chandra Mitra, M.A., P.R.S. and as his contemporary college friends the Right Honourable Syed

Ali, P.C., Sir Surendranath Banerji, Kt., and the poet Babu Nabin Chandra Sen. Sir Gurudas Banerji has once fittingly remarked,—"The First-year Class of the Presidency College of 1865 was a splendid one containing many very brilliant students,. . . . and Mr. Borooah was unquestionably the brightest of this bright band of young students."

Anundoram stood sixth in the First Class in the F.A. Examination held in December 18, 1866, securing the Duff scholarship in Mathematics, and in January, 1869, he stood third in the First Class in the B.A. Examination of the Calcutta University. Emulating the noble example of the glorious trio, Surendranath Banerji, Beharilal Gupta and Ramesh Chandra Dutta, who had left for England a few months ago, Borooah made up his mind to proceed to England, and sat in the competitive examination for the State Scholarship tenable in England. The Syndicate of the Calcutta University in their sitting of the 29th January, 1869, elected Borooah to the scholarship. Besides the state scholarship, Sri Borooah won by open competition the Gilchrist Scholarship as well, and the total value of these stipends amounted to £ 300/- a year.

Borooah proceeded to England in the spring of 1869 with H. Woodrow, M.A., sometime D.P.I. of Bengal, who had taken a kindly interest in this young prodigy from Assam, and had introduced him to Lord Mayo, the then Viceroy and Governor-General of India. Borooah joined one of the Civil Service coaching institutions in London, studied Science in the London University and Law in the Middle Temple. His aptitude for scientific study was so great that Dr. Carpenter, Professor of Zoology in the London University and Principal of the University College, London, once remarked,—"Mr. Borooah was the most inquisitive student that I have ever come across." Borooah passed the I.C.S. Examination in 1870, was called to the Bar in the subsequent year, and is said to have passed also the B.Sc. Examination of the London University. He stood high in Mathematics in the Civil Service Examination. During his stay in England Borooah contracted intimacy with the late Taraknath Palit, Kt., D.L. (then Sri) and it ceased only with the death of Borooah. It may be noted here that Borooah was the first Assamese graduate, the first Assamese Barrister and the first Assamese Civilian, and that up to the present time no other Assamese, has been successful in the open competition for the I.C.S.

Borooah returned to India in the autumn of 1872, and was appointed Assistant Commissioner of the Sibsagar District in his own province, Assam. After a year of service in Assam, Borooah secured transfer to Bengal where he passed the remaining years of his life. His short stay in Sibsagar was marked by his scholastic habits, and his independence of attitude for which he had occasional misunderstanding with his superiors. His usual dress was the old-fashioned aristocratic chouga and chapkan and he used to have a book by his side even in the court which he read in the intervals of his magisterial functions.

Borooah served as an Assistant Magistrate in several places in Bengal; and when after a prolonged agitation, which had as its great patron and supporter, Sir William Hunter, Indian Civilians were first entrusted with the charge of districts, Borooah and R. C. Dutt were eventually District Magistrates and Collectors. And as it is always the case, when Indians are given fair opportunities to prove their mettle they respond magnificently, Borooah and Dutt discharged their duties without any hitch or trouble and thereby paved the path for the Indians in securing the highest responsible posts under the Government.

Borooah did not allow his literary zeal to be damped by the heavy responsibilities of a Magistrate's duties; there issued forth from his pen every year books after books—lexicons, grammars, editions of old Sanskrit texts and compilations from old Sanskrit authors. In 1881, Borooah projected the complilation of a comprehensive Grammar of the Sanskrit Language in twelve volumes of one thousand pages each, and to be able to consult the oriental books and manuscripts of the British Museum, London, he took two year's furlough from November 1881, and sailed for England. He carried on his investigations in England, and in this undertaking his great helpers were Prof. Cecil Bendall, the Keeper of Oriental Books in the British Museum, Mr. Nicholson, the Bodleian Librarian at Oxford, and Dr. Reinhold Rost, the learned Librarian of the India Office. After collecting sufficient materials Borooah returned to India in October 1883.

In 1885, Borooah was appointed Fellow of the Calcutta University, and was attached to the Faculty of Arts. Two years after he was placed for the second time in charge of the Noakhali District in Bengal; and there by his learning, benevolence, sympathetic treatment of the people, and various acts of public utility Borooah won the heart of the people. Schools and markets were established in Borooah's name, and tanks were dug in the interior parts of Bengal and named after him. The learned Burra Saheb of Noakhali used to place at his gate always a man with a few baskets of rice, and any beggar would have his share at any hour of the day. When Borooah went out to the Mofussil he had with him an additional cart loaded with provisions and food which he distributed among the needy folks as they clustered round to catch a glimpse of the Indian magistrate. All these sound romantic and legendary, but it was for this reason that Borooah's name had spread an irresistible charm over the hearts of the people of Bengal. Borooah helped many poor students with books and money, and educated a meritorious Bengali student even in England. He had a staff of erudite Sanskrit Pundits whom he paid handsomely. This learned congerie of orthodox Pundits helped Borooah in the mechanical portions of his literary endeavours. As an official too, he won the trust and confidence of the Government.

In the winter of 1888 Borooah became ill. A sudden attack of paralysis, aggravated by an ill-advised sea-bath, disabled him, and he took leave for three months. He went to Calcutta, lived at the Ballygunge residence of his old friend, Sir Taraknath Palit, and placed himself under treatment of the best allopathic, homeopathic, and Ayurvedic physicians of the day. But even their united efforts failed to cure that fell disease. Borooah passed away in the afternoon of the 19th January, 1889.

Literary Works: Borooah's literary career spread over a period of twelve years only; and considering the shortness of the period, the character of his productions, both in their qualitative and quantitative aspects was simply marvellous. His English-Sanskrit Dictionary appeared in three volumes between 1877 and 1880, and for many years it was the only work of its kind written by an Indian. On the completion of this magnum opus, Borooah was congratulated from all quarters, including among them the illustrious names of Lord Northbrooke, Governor-General of India, and Prof. F. Max Muller. To the second and third volumes of his Dictionary, Borooah prefixed two other original and useful works, viz., his Higher Sanskrit Grammar and Ancient Geography of India.

This was followed by an edition of Bhavabhuti's Mahaviracharitam with Borooah's lucid commentary in Sanskrit called Janakiramabhasya, after his beloved brother Janakiram Borooah. Borooah's next literary ventures were, first, a critical dissertation, named Bhavabhuti and his place in Sanskrit literature, which contained an exhaustive treatment of the Ramaic drama, besides Bhabhuti and his age; and secondly, A Companion to the Sanskrit-reading under-graduates of the Calcutta University, being a few notes on the Sanskrit texts selected for the F.A. and B.A. Examinations. Small though in bulk, the latter books are an important contribution to Sanskrit scholarship. Borooah's comments were suggestive rather than detailed.

The next literary enterprise of Borooah was, to quote Mr. R. C. Dutt's words, "a Sanskrit grammar of formidable size and erudition." In 1881, Borooah projected the compilation of A Comprehensive Grammar of the Sanskrit Language: Critical, Analytical and Historical, in twelve volumes of one thousand pages each. Its object, as described by Boaooah in a prospectus which was circulated among his friends, and lovers and promoters of Sanskrit culture—"was to simplify the rules of grammar as far as possible, to examine their historical growth, and illustrate them fully from the existing literature, both ancient and modern, and to offer a complete commentary on all the Vedas." The first volume of the series, which was on Sanskrit Prosody, came out in 1882 under the somewhat eccentric title of Volume X. The next volume was on Letters and their changes, Nanartha Samgraha, which came out in 1884 as Volume III of the series. The learned world was startled at the encyclopædic character of Borooah's great undertaking. Professor Max Muller wrote to Borooah from Oxford,"I confess I felt almost overwhelmed by the grandeur of it, but if only you carry out some portion of it, you will have done a very useful work. . . . It is a great undertaking and will require for its completion a long life, a long purse and long patience."

Borooah did not live to complete this great literary project. The remaining years of his life were spent in publishing scholarly editions of Saraswatikanthabharanam, Amara' Namalinganusasanam with the commentary of Khiraswami, Dhatukosha and Dhatuvrittisara.

Besides these Sanskrit works, Borooah had arranged to compile a Dialectal Dictionary of the Bengali language, and had for this purpose negotiated with the Government of Bengal for its help and co-operation.

Borooah was a Sanskrit poet of no mean order. In his edition of Mahaviracharitam he had added towards the end of each Act a few autobiographical verses in Sanskrit. These scattered lines, and his Invocation to the Sanskrit Muse prefixed to the second volume of his Dictionary show how this eminent Indian Sanskritist had assimilated the rhythm and melody of the language of his forefathers.

Conclusion: Borooah's useful career was cut short by his untimely death; but his indefatigable exertions on behalf of Sanskrit learning will always be an example to the rising generations of India. His earnestness of purpose is best manifested in his confirmed bachelorhood. As a member of the Indian Civil Service, enjoying the highest emoluments and honour open to an Indian, Borooah could have lived a life of ease and comfort. But Borooah, whose love of Sanskrit did not allow him to share his heart with any earthly object preferred to remain a bachelor; and when he was pressed by any friend to marry he would simply point to the vast array of books in his magnificent library and say,—"This is the darling of my life demanding from me my best energy and attention."

To Borooah, "Sanskrit is dearer than any other language. Its music has charms which no words can express. Its capability of representing every form of human thought in most appropriate language is probably not rivalled, certainly not surpassed by any other language." Borooah always regretted that "Sanskrit research seemed yet to attract very few scholars", and he hoped "that the day is not distant when our countrymen will care more for our home literature than they do now for Shakespeare and Bacon, for Addison and Johnson".

Borooah's broader outlook, his intense love of Sanskrit, and his realisation of the glorious past and the present decadence of the Deva Bhasha led him to neglect the more immediate demand of his own mother language and literature, viz. Assamese, which could not well afford to spare a man of genius of Sri Borooah's calibre from its service; but on the other hand, it freed him from the provincial patriotism which sometime forces people to lose sight of the greater demands of our common mother India. Borooah used to say when any of his zealous countrymen tried to impress upon his mind the necessity of diverting his literary activities towards the cause of Assamese language and literature,—"whatever I do for our common mother India will be shared in due course by my own Assamese fellow countrymen who form an essential factor of the greater Indian brotherhood."

Borooah's passionate devotion to the cause of Sanskrit learning displaced all other ties from his mind. He was extremely reserved and uncommunicative, and did not like to court ephemeral glory and reputation by playing to the gallery, or by making speeches at the slightest provocation. As a silent and unpretentious worker, who maintained the lofty tenure of his mind and the steadfastness of his purpose in the midst of the career, Borooah occupies a place of honour in the rank of the selfless servants of India. What he could do had he not died at the age of thirty-nine reminds us of the measureless potentialities of the glorious "might-have-beens" of the world of which Borooah is a remarkable example.

Here we cannot resist the temptation of quoting the beautiful words of Borooah's great contemporary, Bolinarayan Borah—one of the pioneer Indian Civil Engineers from Cooper's Hill, England,—"Sri Borooah's singleness of purpose was his great characteristic. The industry and application which it demanded made him lead a too sedentary life. He sought little recreation, relief, change and variety. He burnt his candle at both ends, had naturally to pay the inevitable penalty. His life was a meteoric flash and blaze, which burnt up the substance in its lightning course, dazzling mankind for a moment and disappearing for ever from view."

APPRECIATIONS OF ANUNDORAM BOROOAH

1. Sir Gurudas Banerjee, Kt., M.A., D.L., PH.D., formerly Vice-chancellor of the Calcutta University, sometime Puisne Judge of the Calcutta High-Court, in a letter to Dr. S. K. Bhuyan, dated Narikeldanga, Calcutta, January 24, 1912, said:

"In compliance with your verbal request made to me yesterday, I have much pleasure in sending you the following note embodying my reminiscences regarding the late Mr. Anundoram Borooah.

"I became acquainted with Mr. Anundoram Borooah as a first-year student of the Presidency College in 1865, when I was temporarily appointed as an Assistant Lecturer on Mathematics in that College. I came into contact with him almost everyday for a period of one year and the impression he left on my mind was a very favourable one. He was very modest and unassuming, and he did his work in the class remarkably well. There was no problem in Mathematics, simple or difficult, set by me in the class, which Sri Borooah failed to solve. He was quick in arriving at his solutions and they were generally simple and ingenious. The first-year class in the Presidency College that year was a splendid class, containing many very brilliant students, such as the late Sri R. C. Dutt, the late Babu Kartick Chandra Mitra (who afterwards obtained the Premchand Roychand studentship and was for many years a leading pleader of Midnapur), Babu Trailokyanath Bose, for many years a leader of the Dacca Bar, Sri B. L. Gupta and Babu Umakali Mukherjee, one of the leading Vakils of the High Court. Of these Babu Kartick Chandra Mitra, Trailokyanath Bose and Umakali Mukherji were exceedingly good in my subject; and Sri Borooah was unquestionably the brightest of this bright band of young students. It is worthy of note that his class-fellows never grudged to admit his superior merit. It is a matter of deep regret that his brilliant career of public service was cut off so early."

2. Sri Bolinarayan Borah, C.E. (Retd.), formerly Executive Engineer, Assam, in a letter to Dr. S. K. Bhuyan, dated Rothiemay, Darjeeling, November, 19, 1919, said:

"I am in receipt of your letter of the 14th instant, in which you ask me to contribute whatever reminiscences I have of the late Sri A. Borooah, towards the compilation of his biography that you have undertaken, as you are under the impression that I was a close friend of his, and that therefore I was in a position to tell you many things about him. Excuse me saying that you are mistaken in both these respects. I was no personal friend of Sri A. Borooah, indeed I hardly ever came in contact with him; and consequently I can tell you very little about him that is not well-known to anybody else. He was too great a genius and a too sedentary worker to be a close friend of any man.

"I met him in school days in Assam for two or three years, but we hardly exchanged a word, as he had the habit of being rather reserved, exclusive, and too attentive to his books, which unfortunately I was not. Since he left Assam after passing the Entrance Examination in 1864, we never met again. I was not in Calcutta when he was there, I was not in England when he was there. His service was mostly in Bengal, and mine in Assam. So, except for a little correspondence on business matters, I had never come across him. But I knew that he had a great aptitude for Sanskrit studies, for he was known to have been able to recite from memory the whole of Amarakosha even at the early age of 12 or 14. He had an aptitude for Mathematics in 1866 at the First Arts Examination of the Calcutta University, and I believe first too in the Indian Civil Service Examination in 1870. In 1869 he won the State Scholarship of £200 a year tenable for 3 years, and the Gilchrist Scholarship of £100 a year tenable for 5 years in England, having stood first in the respective competitive examinations.

"Sri Borooah continued his Sanskrit studies even after he had entered Government Service, and his monumental work, the Sanskrit Dictionary, besides other Sanskrit works on Grammar, will for all time remain as standing evidence of his genius and industry in the philological line. It was in his contemplation to take in hand a Comprehensive Dictionary of all the Dialects of Bengal when his career was cut short by an all-too-early and sudden death.

"He never married. Being wedded to literature alone, he devoted to it all his tatents, all his capacity for work, all his energy and all his leisure. But let it not be supposed that he never meant to marry. For even so early as at the age of 24, on his return from England he was said to have shown to a friend the portrait of what he called his "intended bride." But literature, his second love, seems to have displaced all other ties from his mind. This singleness of purpose was the great characteristic of Borooah. The industry and application which it demanded made him lead a too sedentary life. He sought little recreation, relief, change and variety. He burnt his candle at both ends, and had naturally to pay the inevitable penalty. His life was a meteoric flash and blaze, which burnt up the substance in its lightning course, dazzling mankind for a moment, and disappearing for ever from view.

"From the above it may perhaps appear to many that this great man was a mere machine, that cannot be credited as having a soul and human sympathy, a mere word-making and figure-calculating machine. But it is not so. His work in the cause of learned humanity is the best proof of his human feeling. His solitude was only the necessary condition of his work. He did not live as an ascetic away from mankind. He lived and worked among men, with men, and came in daily contact with them while discharging his official duties. At home in his private work, he was constantly in company of learned Pandits, and in correspondence with Indian and European scholars. He had a few intimate friends too, though they must necessarily be few, for he did not seek cheap popularity by playing to the gallery, or by showing himself all over the shop, or by making speeches at the slightest provocation. As Emerson said,—"It is easy in the world to live after the world's opinion: it is easy in solitude to live after your own, but the great man is he, who, in midst of the crowd, keeps with perfect sweetness the independence of solitude,"—and I think Sri Anundoram Borooah was just such a great man.

"Sri Borooah was an Assamese by birth. He has been an exemplar to Assamese youths for the last half century, and even as such he has done great good to Assam. But it would be too provincial to call him Assamese and claim him for the little region of Assam. He really belonged to the region of literature. He is claimed by all scholars as belonging to their own class. He is claimed by all India as the enricher of her literature. He is claimed by Bengal, where he did his life-work. He is even claimed by the little town of Berhampur, where he possessed a local habitation, and where he intended to live and work after retirement from service. After satisfying all these claims, the little village of North Gauhati, where he had his parental home, will not have left much for her share. Nevertheless he was first an Assamese, and next all else, and it is an Assamese gentleman at last that has now first undertaken to write his biography, in spite a of all the claims of all the scholars from London to Berhampur.

"Thanking you, Sri Bhuyan, for your courtesy in referring to me for any information I could possibly give you towards the compilation of your biography, and regretting very much that, not having ever come in personal contact with its subject, my contribution is necessarily poor and futile."

3. Prof. Cecil Bendall M.A., Keeper of Oriental Books, British Museum, London, in The Trubne'rs Record, No. 245, 1889, recorded:

"I have been asked to contribute a notice of the life of Anundoram Vaduya (Borooah). His death is announced in the Indian Magazine for March, as having been caused by fever and paralysis, but I cannot hear of any obituary notices by his friends, such as might have been expected to appear in the Indian Press. I understand that he died as long ago as the beginning of January last. Pending fuller information from such quarters, I venture to subjoin the few facts of his life that I have been able to ascertain together with some notice of the useful works by which his name will be long remembered among Sanskritists.

"The deceased scholar was born in 1850, being the second son of Gargaram Vaduya and his wife Durlabheswari, of Gauhati (Gawhatty) in Assam. Of his family and caste I have no means at hand of ascertaining any further facts, though I think that his caste-name is not uncommon in Assam. I may here note in passing that my transcription of his name is taken from the Nagari title-page of his edition of the Mahaviracharita, where his name appears as वड़ुया।

"I have never heard the name pronounced by an Assami, but probably 'Borooah' is as misleading as 'Oude' and the other popular spellings to which the average resident in India clings with such tenacity. He was educated at Presidency College, Calcutta, and graduated B.A. at the Calcutta University in 1869.

"Proceeding to England as a candidate for the Civil Service, for which he was selected in 1870, he matriculated at the London University in the same year, and entered as a student of the middle Temple, and in 1972 was called to the Bar. He revisited England at least once, for I met him in London about 1884. His manner with strangers at least was very reserved and retiring.

"Of his career as a civilian, which he commenced in Bengal in 1872, I have little or nothing to say. At the time of his death he was Joint Magistrate and Deputy Collector of Jessore.* But I cannot forbear to remark that his life gives us all an example, whether in government service or out of it, to show that a mass of routine work need not crush out literary activity when a man is really in earnest. As a rule the Civil Service of India has done little for the literature and science of the country, the exceptions to this being chiefly men in the Educational Department. But certainly, Anundoram Vaduya's twelve well-spent years of service* show him to have been a kindred spirit with administrators like Colebrooke and Burnell among the illustrious dead, and the small band of living workers like Grierson, Fleet and R. C. Temple. Vaduya's first work appeared in May, 1877, and from its Preface we find that it was commenced about 1873 and announced in March 1876. This was his 'Practical English-Sanskrit Dictionary', a most original and truly practical work. Not content with commencing with such a magnum opus as a dictionary, he added to its second and third volumes two new and original works, viz. his 'Higher Sanskrit Grammar" and a list of Sanskrit geographical names, illustrated by a valuable prefactory essay. Both are thoroughly original works, and rather suffer by being united with the Dictionary; the latter is I believe still a unique contribution to Indian research, though only a small one, the great value of the former (now published separately) may be seen from the frequent references to it in Dr. J. S. Speijer's recent work on the same subject.

"In the same year, 1877, appeared the edition of Bhababhuti's Mahaviracharita already referred to in passing, which was followed in 1878 by the essay on Bhababhuti intended to have formed a part of the same book. A third work was completed by Vaduya in 1877, and appeared in 1878, viz. his "Companion to the Sanskrit-reading Undergraduates of the Calcutta University." This consists of criticisms on the commentaries of the two set portions of Kavyas in the University curriculum for 1878, and forms with the works last mentioned, Vaduya's sole contribution to the criticism of Kavya literature. But small in bulk though it is, I cannot but consider it an important contribution to Sanskrit scholarship. European editions of Sanskrit classics generally consist of text with, occasionally, a few original explanatory notes, and at best more or less meagre extracts from the great native commentators. Indian editors, on the other hand, do not really elucidate either text or commentary, but compose a learned super-commentary, which is often, as in the case of Taranatha on the 'Siddhanta-Kaumudi' obscurer than the work professed to be explained. Vaduya takes a most useful middle-course, and without being carried away by the authority of Mallinatha or even by that of Amarsimgha or Panini, explains both commentary and text. This is most useful to the European student. There are plenty of helps for Kalidasa and Manu themselves; but for the due understanding of Mallinatha, Govindaraja or Kulluka, to what work can one refer a pupil ? My own acquaintance, such as it is, with these important scholiasts was first derived, in orthodox fashion, from the mouth of my 'acharya' (Vaduya's teacher too, at Presidency College by the by), who himself was instructed by duly qualified Brahmins; but I question whether the average European student is in a position to study these writers as they deserve. Here, then, was a good and new departure worthy of imitation by Sanskritists, in all lands, and especially in India.

*Sri Borooah was at the time of his death Offg. District Magistrate and Collector, Noakhali. He had then completed 16 years of service.

"Vaduya's remaining works are devoted to the sides of Sanskrit study in which he evidently felt most interested, lexicography, grammar and ars poetica. To the first mentioned class belongs the work which he was publishing at the time of his death, a new edition of the Amarakosha, with several unpublished commentaries, while with the second and third we may rank his 'Dhatu-Vritti-Sara' published in 1886, his collections of and the extensive work on Prosody which he published in 1882, under the somewhat eccentric title of Volume the Tenth of a projected Comprehensive Sanskrit Grammar. These substantial volumes each carefully planned and worked out might well have occupied the leisure of even a far less busy man for a good twenty years.

"But it is not only on the extent of this good scholar's work that I would insist. There is something also in its method and spirit that demand our attention. We often hear complaints of the effect of Western education in India; that the old learning is passing away giving place to an ungodly and bastard veneer of European instruction (I fear I must proudly call it education), tending to replace the grand old figure of the Pandit of old, by that terrible production of the nineteenth century known as the Babu, the butt of satire both European and native as well. Yet Anundoram Vaduya, born near and educated in Bengal, the hotbed of 'Babu-dom', a seeker and a successful seeker of Government employ, the chief prize of this curious educational compromise, never lost his interest in the problems of Sanskrit scholarship.

"Evidently well-grounded in Panini (and where, I would ask the advocates of English education for India, can we find a finer educational instrument than the great Indian Grammars studied in the light of modern research ?), Vaduya brought to bear on the criticism of Sanskrit texts, something of the spirit of what we understand by classical scholarship. He neither discusses the old scholiasts and grammarians with the slavish obsequiousness of a mere follower of tradition, nor yet ignores them like the uninitiated foreign critic, but rather weighs one with another and adjusts the results by the standard of modern research.

"Such seems to me the character of Vaduya's work, and it is because I so strongly feel the value of his example to all of us oriental students, whether European or native, that I have ventured to draw out this notice to greater length than I had at first intended."

Appendix III

OBITUARY NOTICES ON BOROOAH

1. Sri Ramesh Chandra Dutta, I.C.S., C.I.E., in the Preface to his 'Civilisation of Ancient India', 1888, writes:

"Amongst my countrymen the great reformer Raja Rammohan Ray and Dayananda Saraswati turned their attention to Sanskrit Literature. . . . and lastly my learned friend Sri Anundoram Borooah of the Bengal Civil Service has published a handy and excellent English-Sanskrit Dictionary, and is now engaged in a Sanskrit Grammar of formidable size and erudition."

Sri Dutt adds in a footnote to this passage: "Since the above lines were written, the author has received the sad intelligence of the death of the talented scholar. His untimely death is a loss to Sanskrit scholarship in this country which will not be easily remedied. To the present writer the sorrow is of a personal nature, as he enjoyed the friendship of the deceased for twenty years, and more—since the old College days in this country and in England."

2. Dr. Gurudas Banerjee, M.A., D.L., as Vice-Chancellor of Calcutta University, in his Convocation Speech, 1890, said:

"During the year under review we lost by death or retirement eleven of our colleagues in the Senate and the brief retrospect of the past would be incomplete if I were not to record our deep sense of regret for that loss. (Then follow references to the death of Reynolds and Kabiruddin Ahmed).

"Sri Anundoram Borooah was a distinguished graduate of this University, and a no less distinguished member of the Civil Service. Amidst the engrossing duties of this office, he could find time to plan and partly execute literary works of profound scholarship, and it is a matter of no small regret that untimely death prevented him from completing them."

3. The Hindu Patriot, January 21, 1889, wrote:

"We deeply regret to announce the death of Sri Anundoram Borooah, C.S., on Friday last from fever and paralysis. He was a highly cultured man and his scholastic attainments were well-known through the country. His Sanskrit Grammar and Dictionary were worthy of a scholar, who had made this branch of knowledge a special study. As a distinguished public officer he enjoyed the confidence of Government and the good opinion of the people, and gave satisfaction wherever he went. He rose to be a District Magistrate when his career was unfortunately cut short. His early death is a loss to this country in general and to his service."

4. The Indian Mirror, January, 22, 1889, wrote:

"We deeply regret to hear of the death of Mr. A. Borooah, C.S., on Friday last in Calcutta. The number of covenanted civilians among our countrymen is not very large, and Sri Borooah's loss is a great one indeed. He was a distinguished Sanskrit scholar, and did much to further the cause of Sanskrit learning. His premature death is mourned by the whole native community."

5. Sir Surendranath Banerjee, in his autobiography 'A Nation in Making', 1931, writes:

"Among the Indian candidates who competed with us for the Indian Civil Service in 1869 was another remarkable man whose early death deprived the world of a Sanskrit scholar of great promise—I mean Anundoram Borooah. In regard to him also there was the difficulty about the age to which I have referred; but, the point having been settled in my case, it was no longer raised in his. He came from Assam and distinguished himself at the examinations of the Calcutta University. Having obtained a state scholarship, he went to England to compete for the Indian Civil Service. He secured a place for himself among the successful candidates in 1870. As a member of the Indian Civil Service he combined the duties of an administrator with extraordinary devotion to literature, and at the time of his death, I understand, he as engaged in preparing a dictionary (grammar) of the Sanskrit language which, alas, never saw the light. His was a case of blighted promise which in its fruition would have enriched the world of letters."
